With over 10 years of experience, he's managed commerce content and initiatives for Digital Trends, Mobile Nations, & Future PLC. When not deal hunting, he's likely spending time with his family, building something or researching his next big purchase.

The highly anticipated fight between Gervonta "Tank" Davis and Ryan Garcia is here. On Saturday night in Las Vegas, the two undefeated professional boxers will step into the ring together and only one will leave with a perfect record. Boxing fans have been anxiously awaiting this matchup to take place for quite a while. The fight is being billed as "It Doesn't Get Any Better Than This."

Davis has a total of 28 fights under his belt, 26 of which he's won via knockout. Garcia has had 23 fights to date with 19 of them ending in knockouts. Garcia has the height and reach advantage, coming in at about 6 inches taller than Davis with an extra 3 inches of reach. There's an immense amount of power behind each fighter, and with this many combined knockouts between the two it will be very interesting to see how long they can stay on their feet in the ring together.

Here are all the details of tonight's big fight, including start time, how to watch it and more.

How to watch Davis vs. Garcia from anywhere

If you find yourself unable to view Davis vs. Garcia locally, you may need a different way to watch the fight -- that's where using a VPN can come in handy. A VPN is also the best way to stop your ISP from throttling your speeds on the day by encrypting your traffic, and it's also a great idea if you're traveling and find yourself connected to a Wi-Fi network, and you want to add an extra layer of privacy for your devices and logins.

With a VPN, you're able to virtually change your location on your phone, tablet or laptop to get access to the game. So if your internet provider or mobile carrier has stuck you with an IP address that incorrectly shows your location in a blackout zone, a VPN can correct that problem by giving you an IP address in your correct, nonblackout area. Most VPNs, like our Editors' Choice, ExpressVPN, make it really easy to do this.

Using a VPN to watch or stream sports is legal in any country where VPNs are legal, including the US, UK and Canada, as long as you have a legitimate subscription to the service you're streaming. You should be sure your VPN is set up correctly to prevent leaks: Even where VPNs are legal, the streaming service may terminate the account of anyone it deems to be circumventing correctly applied blackout restrictions.
